Kindness

Showing others they are valuable by how you
treat them

What does Kindness mean?

Kindness means you are concerned about other people. Kind people think about another person's feelings and not just their own, they help someone who is in need, and they are kind even when others are not. Kindness makes the world a nicer place, because it makes people happier.

Why Do Acts of Kindness Improve Mental Health?

- They distract us from our own problems and help us keep a sense of perspective
- They help us feel grateful for what we have
- They get us more socially engaged and involved
- They improve our self esteem and feelings of competence
- Memories of your act of kindness produce feelings of happiness that last for long after the act is completed
- Positive acts reduce stress and negativity (such as anger and frustration)

Exercise Kindness

It's kind of like weight training, we found that people can actually build up their compassion 'muscle' and respond to others' suffering with care and a desire to help.

Anxiety & Depression

Kindness improves mood, depression and anxiety. Kindness stimulates the production of serotonin which heals wounds, calms and increases happiness.

Kindness is Contagious

Experiencing an act of kindness can improve our mood, it can make our day and increase the likelihood of spreading that kindness to others.

Pain

Kindness releases endorphins in the brain. It's a natural painkiller!

Relationships

Kindness helps improve relationships by reducing the distance between individuals.

Stress

Kind people age slower and have lower stress than the average person.

SMILE

Self-Worth

Kindness can make us not just feel good about ourselves, but begin to believe in ourselves, increasing our self-worth.

STARTS
WITH ME!

Be Kind to Yourself

- Prioritise some "me" time so you can relax and reflect.
- Treat yourself to something small
- Do something you enjoy like listening to a favourite song or piece of music
- Spend some time in nature, which is good for your wellbeing

The Random Acts of Kindness Challenge

With this in mind, we're asking you to try and help others once a day for a week and see if it makes a difference to how you feel.

Kindness doesn't have to be an over-the-top or grand gesture to be beneficial. The positive effects of kindness on your brain can happen from something as simple opening a door for someone or saying "hello" with a smile and asking how their day is going.

Try to keep track of any random acts of kindness that you've carried out or that someone has done for you, and make a note of how they made you feel.

RANDOM ACTS OF

KINDNESS DAY

At School

- Say hi to other students and ask how they are
- Get to know someone new
- Listen to your friends if they are having a bad day
- Say thank you
- Praise someone for something they have done well

- Call a friend that you haven't spoken to for a while
- Post a card or letter to someone
- Find out if a neighbour needs any help with shopping
- Tell your family members how much you love and appreciate them
- Help with household chores
- Check on someone who is going through a tough time

In the community

- Give up your seat on the bus
- Help to carry someone's shopping
- Be considerate to others
- Pick up some rubbish in the street
- Smile and say hello to people you may pass every day, but have never spoken to before

Kindness is not sacrificing your safety to help someone.

If you're unsure if the kind act will put you into harm, don't do it. If you're going outside of your comfort zone to help someone because you want to be "a nice person," don't do it. There are lots of ways to be kind without putting yourself in harm's way. I think this is especially true for people who don't like to say "no" or who feel like they always have to be the hero.

Stay safe
